Push Cart Arsenal Lone Clue in $427,000 Robbery in New York

American holdup jangling in his veins.

Tuning his $427,000 robbery of an armored truck yesterday as a birthday celebration to Police Commissioner O'Ryan's 6th birthday anniversary. This new strategy of crime executed the theft as smoothly and tied to exactly that his trail ran everywhere today into dead ends.

The police, falling in their quick-sets today, yesterday to make the desperado and his men, turned their strength today into the hunt. Throughout the night the air bristled with radio commands to cruising squad cars and speedy police patrols.

"Search all cars occupied by two or more men—"

"Search all garages and inquirers if Lincoln sedan already found has been hidden in garage since June 6 to date."

"Be on lookout for 12 men in three cars, one carrying Thompson machine gun. Apprehend with caution."

No arrests have been made, but scores of men, women and children witnesses to all or part of the hold-up—have been questioned.

WITNESSES SILENT

Police declined to discuss the result of this phase of their inquiry. The witnesses were pledged not to make any statement.

One officer said three men whom police suspect may have had his fingers in the robbery are being sought. This was without further confirmation.

Some credence was given to a theory that the crime was planned by the finding last night of empty machine guns—possibly the very five in which the $427,000 was being transported—in the rear of Flin's bar and his sign in Sheepshead Bay, Brooklyn.

IN GANG TERRITORY

The Sheepshead Bay territory is close to that once controlled by the notorious Frankie Yale. It was here that Yale, who had gathered the Yale gang around him, was killed in a gun battle with police.

The Yale gang, which was a gang of gangsters—operated a flourishing business in the territory, and were known for their ruthless and brutal methods.

The empty money bags were found crumpled beneath cigarette vending machines in a grocery store. They were stamped "Federal Reserve" and "Brooklyn, Massachusetts."

Paul Chou, a bartender in Flin's bar, said 10 men who he never had seen before, entered the bar at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon—three hours and a half after the robbery—went had a round of beer. The number of men involved in the holdup has been variously fixed at between 10 and 14.

THEFT WITHOUT PRECEDENT

The money taken from the armored truck consisted of sums collected at several Brooklyn branches of the Bank of Manhattan, as well as from private firms. It was destined for the Federal Reserve Bank in Manhattan.

The robbery is without precedent either in the size of the cash lost, or in the nature of the theft itself. Never before has an armored truck of the United States Trusting Corporation been robbed. The trucks themselves have always been open as a "holdup proof."

An average of $150,000 is transported in these trucks through the streets of New York each week day. Yesterday the "big haul" was more than doubled.

The police have apparently no inclination toward any theory that the holdup may have been an "inside job." They call attention to the fact that not only were the two guards and the truck driver men of youthful integrity, but also that no adverse information as to a truck's route is ever made known.

The truck crews do not know from one day to another what route they are to make or what route they are to take. Records are given into the hands of the truck "conductors" just before starting each day.

A detective, returning early today to headquarters after hours on the case, said he was convinced that the robbers were former hijackers of the dry era, and that they probably are men without city of New York police records.

CITY'S HICKER METHODS

The hijacker technique marked yesterday's truck robbery, this officer said.

In prohibition days, he recalled, gangs numbering a dozen or more men would swim over the side of a run-running vessel, take over the cargo at the point of pistols and machine guns, and escape in speed boats to neighboring destinations, where fast motor cars and trucks awaited.

Fast cars and speedboats were essentials of yesterday's crime. The thieves drove away in cars of such power as to enable them to outdistance pursuit, and went directly to a dock where speedboats awaited them to race them.

The police circle that had been quickly swung around downtown Brooklyn.

Boston, Aug. 22.—Miss Katherine Homer of New York, daughter of Louise Homer, operatic contralto, will be married to Dr. Douglas Fryer, also of New York, Saturday afternoon at the picturesque home estate, "Horseland," on the Lake George-Boston road.

Miss Homer, who is a member of the Junior League and of the faculty of Neighborhood Music School of New York, has been accompanied for her mother. She is a graduate of Miss Hall's School.

The lone clue police have in the $427,000 pay car holdup in Brooklyn yesterday is the pushcart in which a machine gun was hidden under a piece of canvas. The pushcart, with the gun still in it, is shown where it was found near the car in front of the robbery scene.

MISS KATHLEEN BASSETT Abandoned in Field

Yarmouth, N. S., today informed Miss Mary Ward, commissioner of immigration for the Boston district, that they had received the case of Malcolm Bird, 29, of Westleigh street, Dorchester.

The man is now at Yarmouth, N. S., unable to return to his native country because of an immigration department contention that, although his father, Colin Bird, is a naturalized citizen, the son is not an American because there is no record of his having been brought into the country as a child.

The younger Bird is to be questioned today at Yarmouth by Inspector George Lantz of the United States Immigration Service, on the case of Colonel Dan W. McCormack, United States immigration commissioner at Washington.

Police Here to Guard Trucks

By Associated Press

Extra precautions will be taken by Boston police to protect armored bank cars when they make collection stops, according to orders issued today as a result of the daring $427,000 Brooklyn, N. Y., holdup.

The order, issued by Acting Superintendent of Police James McDevitt, was read today at morning roll call. The order commanded all police officers to stand by when a bank car was stopped to make a money transfer.

The United States Trust Corporation, victim of the holdup, has seven armored trucks operating in Boston and Cambridge.

These trucks are similar to the one from which the bandits obtained the largest cash haul in criminal history.

Baby Abandoned in Field

By Associated Press

There was a delightful waif about his chubby face and tiny pug nose. And he could speak his thoughts, maybe he'd say something like this:

"Why was I brought into the world if my mother doesn't want her son? Why did I have no body when I was born? I have no mother and father to take care of me. Why did I have no body when I was born? I have no mother and father to take care of me."

When he was found he was wrapped in a blanket and dressed in blue rompers with white trimmings. He showed no signs of long exposure and gave the appearance of good care.

His skin is smooth and unblemished. He has a full head of hair, full cheeks. He is an adorable youngster. Leaving him, knowing that soon he is to be tagged, puts at one's heartstrings.

IS CHERIEF

But for all the tragedy that has come into his baby life, the blue-eyed youngster gives the impression of his bright eyes peering over the top and into the face of his interviewer.

Miss Catherine Grant, supervisor of the home, expressed surprise over the abandonment of this child.

It has been her experience that most of the contemplating mothers who bring their babies don't wait 10 months to make up their minds. She said:

"Usually mothers can't bear to part with their babies when they've got a few teeth in their mouth, but a few more months."

'OUR MARY' TELLS OF HOPE OF RECONCILIATION WITH DOUG

NEW REUNION OF COUPLE REPORTED

By Associated Press
Hollywood, Aug. 22.—The future of the royal family of the films, Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, rested in the lap of the gods today.

That is the way "America's Sweetheart" described the status of their once idyllic marriage which has found its way into the divorce courts.

Despite the secrecy of their movements, it was reliably reported Fairbanks, died with Miss Pickford at Pickford, the home where they often entertained notables and where the actress now lives. Later they went for another automobile drive.

With a wistful smile, she spoke of her meeting yesterday with Fairbanks upon his return to Hollywood after 14 months in Europe. What transpired between the two, for whom Hollywood hopes a reconciliation lies ahead, nothing was known.

"Yes, I saw Douglas. Whether I shall see him again is in the lap of the gods. Further than that I can say nothing."

DOUGLAS SILENT
Fairbanks, true to the silence which he has met all inquiries about his "private life" has nothing to say.

The famous couple met yesterday afternoon near a fashionable hotel in Beverly Hills. A few hours earlier, Fairbanks had alighted from a special car at a Los Angeles station.

After an interval in which few knew what happened and none would tell, he met Miss Pickford in Beverly Hills, entered her automobile and went with her for a drive. It was after that that she made her statement.

REUNION POSSIBLE
Her calm, pleasant demeanor seemed to indicate that Hollywood had reason to hope for a reunion of the couple who ruled in social destinies and captured its public for so many years.

There was almost certain to be another meeting between the couple, even if for no other purpose than to talk over business.

How long Fairbanks will remain here was not known. The actor said he would be indefinite. When he left his train, he said he had come here for business reasons.

Questioned about the possibility of "making" up with "his famous wife," he replied with a show of a smile: "There is no one asking me about that."

Girls Bare Fatal Struggle at Hearing

Mrs. Ebell Says Kidnap Charges Are 'Silly'

made out, the attorney left for Norwich this afternoon to get the signatures of the two women. Attorney McHugh visited Suffolk Probate Court and examined the divorce papers before leaving for Connecticut.

Mrs. Ebell was arrested at midnight last Saturday as she drove through Providence with Louis Goldsmith, 37, of Newland street, Roxbury, formerly friend and her nine-year-old daughter, Helen, over whose custody the death of the Brooklyn musician resulted.

In the midst of the fast moving events, Mrs. Agnes Castle, mother of the young mother who is accused, suffered a collapse in the Hotel Watkinson, at Norwich, where she has been a guest during her daughter's battle for freedom.

Mrs. Castle was found wandering by the management of the hotel and a Norwich physician was called to administer aid. Today she was reported improved.

The aged mother had been buoyed until the new kidnap charge was placed with the hope—that a woman inquest would clear her daughter of the charge that she was an accessory to the death of her husband in a joint with Goldsmith when the child was taken from the camp Saturday night.

LEGAL BATTLE LOOMS

The older woman was in marked contrast to her accused daughter, the later taking her position calmly at the jail, as did Goldsmith, the later charged with murder of Ebell.

The new kidnap charge, revealed in yesterday's issue of the Boston Evening American, was placed by State Trooper John W. Smith, whose radio and teletype call to police of New England resulted in the arrest at Providence of Goldsmith, Mrs. Ebell and palamedes "Peggy" who custody resulted in her father's death.

The charge added the possibility of an interesting legal tangle that may yet involve the validity of a Massachusetts court decree in the state of Connecticut.

CAMP HEADS TESTIFY

Little Peggy, whose real name is the same as her mother's, was taken back at the camp today, still unaware that her father is dead and not merely back in Boston, who stood their "shores" and the child was left there by agreement of the family with Coroner McKay so that she might be questioned again in the event that the inquiry required it.

Peggy was principal witness at the inquest that also included testimony of five pretty girl counselors, who stood their "shores" and dressed in "city clothes" for the trip to Coroner McKay's office.

The counselors included Miss Avis Thompson, 17, of Turner street, Willimantic, Conn., who is known about as "Peggy." It was her testimony that Ebell's application for admittance of his children at the exclusive camp bore the name of Miss Thompson as a reference.

GIRL REVEALS PUNCH

Most of the witnesses had little to tell in regard to the actual death of Ebell, but Miss Thompson testified that Goldsmith "punched" Ebell just before the latter fell to the ground. Under further questioning, Miss Thompson said she could not say whether or not the "punch" struck.

Irish Rumor Mongers Busy, Papers Idle in Strike

By Associated Press

Dublin, Aug. 22.—Mongers of rumors are having a gorgeous time of it these days by originating fantastic stories which receive the widest publicity.

It is because the Irish Free State is without its principal newspapers, owing to a printers' strike, which has been effective nearly a month.

The wider these rumors are spread and the more difficult they are to scout.

President De Valera is seriously ill. "Shots have been fired in the city," said "King George has intervened in the economic war."

ETTER CHAIR OR FREEDOM, SAYS 'LITTLE EVA'

By International News Service

Cooperstown, N. Y., Aug. 22.—A strange, crooked, geometric figure of many sides supplanted the usual love triangle at the murder trial of "Little Eva" Coo today.

The new love pattern was injected into this weird and fantastic case as Harry Nabinger, salesman lover of the fairland not so quiet queen was accused of amour with the woman, whose testimony the State hopes will send the big blonde defendant to the chair.

Martha Clift, confessed accomplice in the murder of Harry Wright, planned to flee with Nabinger and live in comparative wealth on the insurance profits she and Eva Coo hoped to realize from the murder, the defense says.

Nabinger, wife dealer, was accused of this in a fierce counter-attack launched by "Little Eva" lawyers today.

Not only did Nabinger make secret love to the 28-year-old mother but other women were wooed by the extraveiling salesman, the defense charged.

Almost Chesterfieldian in manner, Nabinger has been an impressive and important witness. On the stand for the first time yesterday, he was subjected to a fierce, bitter grilling, directed by Eva Coo.

MAY ASK NEW PROBE

There is a strong possibility that James J. Byard, Jr., chief of Mrs. Coo's staff of attorneys, may ask the Otsego grand jury to reopen its investigation of the crime of Crumhorn mountain as a result of admissions made by the salesman in his testimony for the state. Byard asked:

"Was he granted immunity like Martha Clift, who admits she drove the car that killed Wright? That is one of the things I'm going to find out."

Broad-shouldered, hard-eyed Eva Coo will accept no compromise. It is freedom of the chair, she said.

STRONG, SHE SAYS

Although her attorneys refused comment, it was told by the International News Service today that when they considered an immunity plea as a possible last resort, the iron woman of Crumhorn Mountain refused to give her consent.

She said: "They say I was beginning to break under the strain. That is not true. I feel free and ready for a real fight."

The so-called new witnesses, who swear they saw Eva Coo and Martha Clift with the death car on Murder Hill the night Wright died, will testify today.

They are Mrs. and Mrs. Benjamin Hunt and Mrs. Iva Pink. Mrs. Hunt's mother and owner of the Scott farm.

FORFEITED RUM BOND IN SUIT

A prohibition era scandal which ended the Canadian government $125,000 in bond forfeitures was reopened here today when Judge Hugh D. MacLellan in Federal court authorized a commissioner to go to Canada to obtain the forfeitures from 22 witnesses.

The authorization was granted to the Canadian Surety Company which is suing Patrick A. McConnell of Boston for return of the $125,000 forfeited to the Canadian government because liquor had been illegally removed from bonded warehouses and exported.

The authorization was granted over the protests of McConnell's attorney, William Flaherty, on the grounds that his client did not have sufficient funds to bear the expense of the commissioner's trip.

BACON SCORES "NEW DEAL"

Scarbore, Me., Aug. 22—A new national Tammany Hall in Washington, "replete with waste, extravagance and even of corruption," was the description given here by Lieutenant Governor Charles G. Bacon of Massachusetts of "the New Deal, as it has operated." Continuing the G. O. P. election campaign drive in Maine against the Roosevelt administration and its New Deal features, Bacon spoke before a meeting of the Lincoln Club. In his speech he declared: "The aim of this new national Tammany Hall machine is to perpetuate the administration in power. Its vast bureaucracy, its wrecking of the civil service system, its colossal division of the spoils, its dumping of federal funds into the states of its friends and its cracking down of its foe—all these smacks of New York's Tammany Hall in the heyday of its greatest power."

Santanelli, given a police permit to carry a revolver after his life had been threatened, shot and killed two men on Washington's Birthday during an attempted "shakedown" at his store in East Boston.

Was Hitler's Face Red

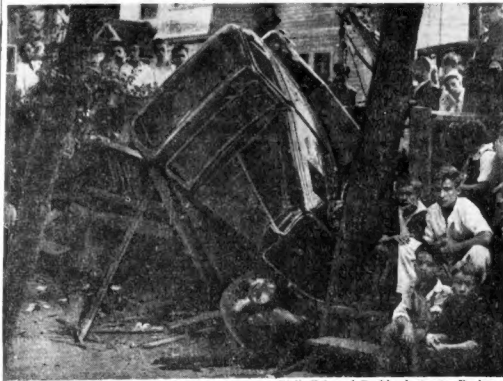

By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER
Those 4,000,000 votes were astonishing in Germany's one-man presidential campaign.

Still, as Hitler says, "They may have been against me, but they weren't for anybody else." If 4,000,000 got up enough noise to elect Adolf, then we claim that a gang of 200,000 Zerkow's old time voters could have won that election.

The question now is what's going to happen to those 4,000,000? The High Command says they must be converted. And it doesn't mean converted into long term bonds.

Mussolini gave them castor oil and we know that Adolf has a mixture that will make that seem like the nectar of the gods. Copyright 1934. Distributed by Universal Service, Inc.

WIFE NO. 2 TO BLOODY STONE AID HUSBAND IS DEATH CLUE

Unless Alfred Saulier of Milford, hotelier engineer, were successful in a last minute plea that his first wife take him back, he faced arraignment in Quincy court today on charges of bigamy. Saulier's second wife, the former Emma Bouchard of Water street, Quincy, will withdraw the charges on which he was arrested, for the sake of his three children by the first wife, she said, providing the other woman is willing to take him back. Mrs. Saulier No. 1 and Mrs. Saulier No. 2 met for the first time in court, where the engineer was ordered to pay $10 a week for the support of No. 1 and her three children. The two women sat together in a friendly way, apparently holding no hard feeling toward one another.

George Marshall Comes To Launch Boston's Football Season
The Horse Lough At Narragansett; Werber's Audacity

By AUSTEN LAKE

YES, CERTAINLY, THE FOOTBALL season is open in Boston. I say so because George Marshall, the dark angel and cash-papa of the professional Redskins, is in town. And when George Marshall arrives the foliage, due to the heat of his enthusiasm, automatically begins to tip itself with autumn reds and yellows and the air takes on the fragrance of burning leaves.

New George is a tall, youngish gent with a laugh like a high pressure pump. Uh-chu-chu, who does not merely talk football. He exudes it through his pores while pacing his hotel chamber and combing his black hair with his fingers.

He, who has buttered his cash thickly on the pro gridiron during the past two years, is one of Boston's five major sport promoters in the big field. The others are Tom Yawkey, Judge Fuchs, C. F. Adams and Paul Bowser. And it is odd that all five who have sunk a handful of gold dollars in this city, were, originally, not Bostonians at all but emigrants from other parts.

AND IT IS CURIOUS THAT OF the five, only Bowser had a practical background in his game, having served, during his youth, a wrestling apprenticeship in country circuses and county fairs. Marshall is a Washington laundry operator and newspaper publisher. Fuchs was a lawyer and police court magistrate. Yawkey is a New York industrialist with factory, mine and mill holdings. And C. F. Adams, originally a Vermonter, is a Bostonian by adoption concerned with chain groceries.

After a period of probation, the pro football business is developing customer appeal in Boston.

This is due to the fact that the Boston public, long convinced that football was a college game, or spectacle, in which the crowd went as much to see the crowd as the game, now realizes that football may be looked upon for its own sake, stripped of its fripperies and jimeracks, such as cheer leaders and schoolboy doggerel.

Until recently professional football has been a tight town affair, prosperous only in mill towns and railroad cities where the college game is never seen. As in Buffalo, N. Y., Canton and Massillon in Ohio, Frankfort and Pottsville in Pennsylvania.

During boom times it seemed that a college football player could find something better to do on graduating, and many of the fine old idealists of the game denounced professional football as something sinister and a bad influence on the school community.

But that was before the pale sea, in college graduates, athletic and otherwise, were forced to scale down their notions, and instead of going into the trade of selling bum books, were forced to whip up a living where they could.

Now the college crowd is admitting that pro football is far superior to the college brand, even at its best, and each Sunday, are among the railroads who sit and study pro styles or marvel, wistfully, at its technical perfection.

BALLOS, A SHINY LITTLE HORSE with whiplash muscles and matchstick legs, is one of many sensitive beasts whose owner caters to his whims at Narragansett. Ballos, if you please, must have his pet pony-friend, conduct him to a post, a ragged, rusty little animal who shambles along shamelessly with spread Ballos ears. This costs owner, H. Lingsbach, $10 extra every time he runs, being the price of the fine for extra service.

Narragansett, like all horse tracks, is overrun with pets, including the Whitney stable's white goat, dogs, kites and roosters. Many horse men when their pets are taken away. Harry Unna, trainer, tells me that a horse has just as keen a sense of humor as a human.

I can believe that, and I imagine after some of the afternoon doings, the horses literally laugh themselves to sleep. They tell me after dark the barns are a symphony of equine giggles, snorts and whinnies.

AS SOMEONE SAID LATELY, "My idea of a soft snap on the baseball field is the face of the umpire." Well, there's another craft job in sport, too, the third base umpire for example, and the flag man at the Narragansett race track, who stands 20 yards down the chute with his red banner, ready to signal the jockeys in case of a false start.

Jimmy Butwell, an ex-jockey, has this task at Pawtucket, paying $15 a day. And only once or twice in a race meeting does he fail to flag the horses.

Yet in all of these cases, field judge, umpire and flagman, you need them, you need them very badly indeed. A misfired third base umpire, or a goal, a missed decision at third base, or a flagman's slip in the important scoring areas, can work havoc.

For example, the false start at Rockingham last meeting in which the horses passed the flag and raced the full distance before called back.

FOR OPEN, BARE-FACED AUDACITY, this William Werber of the Red Sox wins the moustache cup. In the fifth inning yesterday, Detroit's "Schoolboy" Rowe men a walk. Bill ambled down the path leisurely, but suddenly, he turned the corner and raced for second.

For Werber, the catcher, gasped in dumfounded amazement. He finally threw the ball to second but by this time Bill was eating the dust from his breeches.

An example of the audacity and scornful disregard for the rules of the game. You lost around for an example of the old-time terror of the baselines. No longer responsible to a base, and his greatest ambition was to score on a hit, until, one day, he did it.

Police Unification Plan Setback Censured

THERE is bound to be at least temporary discouragement among the forces of law and order throughout the country because of the defeat of the police co-ordination bill, the so-called "Scottish Yard" bill at the hands of the Massachusetts Legislature. This attempt to bring about better training, equipment and organization of the many local police forces in the State was the result of a careful investigation made in the latter part of 1933 by a special commission.

The bill which resulted was further developed by the joint judiciary committees of the Legislature after weeks of study, and had the constant support of the Governor of the State and of leading metropolitan newspapers. But it ran up against the local prejudices and prerogatives of petty politicians, and therefore was decisively defeated.

Greater Boston, it should be recalled, is a closely-knit congeries of forty political units, each with its own police force responsible to its own political superior. Naturally, there is the greatest possible variance in equipment, personnel, training and vigor of enforcement. Responsibility is divided, and citizens have become greatly alarmed because of the series of bank robberies, theater holdups, jewel thefts, the stealing of guns and ammunition and other similar violent depredations upon society. The State is one in which security of person and property is especially prized, and the people have been stirred to great indignation and fear by the cold, heartless and deliberate methods employed by desperate criminals.

THE police co-ordination bill left the ordinary routine management and control of police forces in cities and towns, including the power of appointment and promotion, with the local authorities, but it gave a State public-safety commission, itself made up in part of local police chiefs, the power to direct the police activities of the entire State in case of an emergency. It required local police chiefs to report to the State Commission all felonies committed by unidentified persons, and to cooperate intelligently with the Federal authorities to aid the local police. The bill also provided for the proper training of local police by the State, and set up regulations designed to take appointments and promotions out of politics as far as possible.

It must be borne in mind that England has had a somewhat similar system since 1856, when the Home Office was first given a measure of control over local constables. Local responsibility and "home rule" have never been taken away from these constables in England, but a degree of uniformity has been attained, the local forces are subject to inspection by Home Office officials, part of the local expenses is paid by the central government, and local politics has never become the bane of police systems, as with us.

It is perfectly obvious that in a country as vast as this no Federal system of police can become truly effective, without the danger of abuse and tyranny, unless first of all the various states are properly organized to meet the situation and to co-operate intelligently with the Federal authorities.

It is equally obvious to fair-minded and unprejudiced persons that a co-ordination and considerable unification of local police, more or less like that proposed in Massachusetts, will have to come in all our states. Governor Big of Massachusetts refers to the political influence of a few men "who under the present methods are privileged citizens able to secure favors which do not belong and cannot be granted to the great mass of the electorate."

This, however, is only the first attempt. Pressing reforms are rarely won on the first try. This one is of a nature which cannot be put off much longer, or defeated indefinitely by any group, no matter how powerful, politically or otherwise. The necessity for public safety in parliament, and the people can be counted upon to appreciate such a simple fact in time.

Guard Life Adequately

A 13-YEAR-OLD GIRL was drowned off Carson Beach, South Boston, this week as she saved the life of her 5-year-old brother.

Added to her heroism was that of a father who heard her screams and went to the rescue. He was able to bring the little boy ashore, but not the girl.

Witnesses to the tragedy say that the sacrifice of the girl's life and the heroism of her father would have big if not necessary had there been more life guards at the beach.

Boys had to run several hundred yards to bring the nearest one to the scene. He hurried, and dived frantically in an effort to find the girl. But he was too late. That was not his fault.

But blame does attach to the City Administration if it is guilty of leaving the beaches without an adequate number of life guards.

That accusation was made by Representative David G. Nagle of South Boston. In a letter to Mayor Mansfield and Park Commissioner Long, he said:

"Forget your countrymen, but give sufficient life guards to protect our children at the bathing beaches."

We second that plea, and also his suggestion that enough qualified men can be found on the welfare lists. Why make them wild ERAs when they are needed on the beaches?

The summer is not yet at an end. There is still time for more tragedies. And still need to guard against them.

Pouf! What's $400,000?

Henry L. Shattuck, Henry Parkman, Jr., Albert P. Bigelow and Christian Hervey—four men whose names carry weight on Beacon Hill—have joined in the latest statement, explaining their opposition to the proposal that the General Court meet only once in two years, instead of annually as at present.

They recite all the old arguments—some of them pretty thin—to advance their cause. But they say that the far greater savings that can and must be effected through county reform.

Granted that this is a small part of the State budget, most persons will nevertheless be grateful if our legislators slice even that "little off" the tax bills.

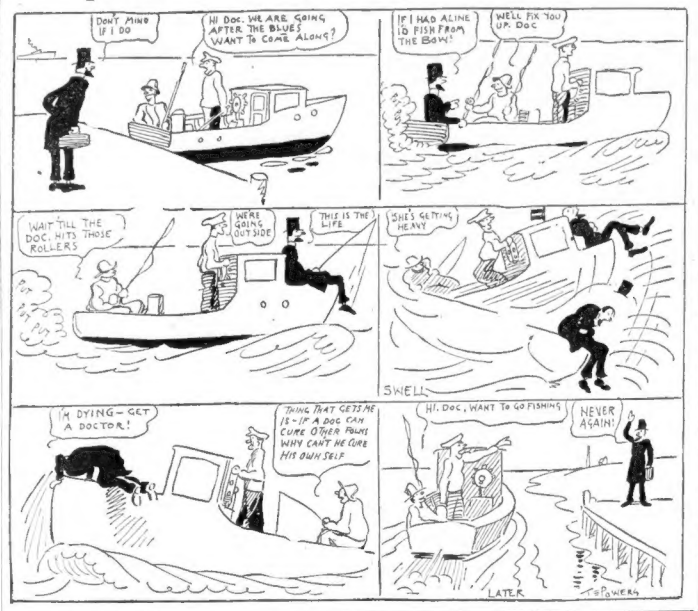

And if these men spurn so "slight" a saving, is it any wonder that they have nothing to say about the far greater savings that can and must be effected through county reform?
